Master of Arts in Curriculum & Instruction with a Concentration in Dual Credit English

The University of Indianapolis is offering an innovative Master of Arts degree in Curriculum and Instruction specifically for high school English teachers interested in teaching dual credit classes at their school or undergraduate courses on a college campus. This program of study emphasizes new instructional techniques and scholarship in literature and written communication. Teachers admitted to the program will earn the required graduate-level content area credits typically required to teach dual credit courses.

Program Basics
- Thirty-six credit hours earned over six semesters (including each of two summer sessions)
- Two courses per semester
- Convenient evening courses during the school year and in the summer. Some classes are offered in a hybrid* format.
- Unique Capstone experience focused on both content and pedagogy
- Six previously earned credit hours may be transferred into the program upon transcript review
