

Creating a Social-Emotional Framework at the University of Indianapolis/CELL

Presented by Derek Peterson

March 2, 2017, 8:30 a.m. -- 3:30 p.m. (EST)

In spite of our best efforts, teens continue to be impacted by drugs, alcohol, suicidal ideation, bullying, and a host of other issues that affect them and their community. Caring and connected adults form the foundation of a youth's ability to avoid these problems and/or bounce back from them.

This session will guide participants to understand, integrate, and apply the best of current youth development research for treating, teaching, counseling, neighboring, and parenting children and teens. Participants will learn meaningful, measurable, and memorable strategies and methods that support youth to get on, and stay on, a course towards resilience and success.

Kaleidoscope Connect's simple, but proven, framework will inspire and guide you to support youth and work with them to recognize, appreciate, and amplify their unique strengths, talents, and characteristics. Participants will learn proven practices that will decrease negative behaviors and encourage positive outcomes. Attendees will receive tools and practice strategies to help youth reach their fullest potential.

Attendees will learn

- A deep yet elegant framework that is meaningful, memorable, and measurable
- To see where the strengths lie in the developmental ecology of each student, regardless of his/her disabilities, adverse childhood experiences, or depth of disconnection
- How to positively affect the developmental trajectory of individual students
